To whom it may concern,

Several months ago, towards the conclusion of 2016, I had submitted my application to Fivestone for the position of Junior Web Developer. At that time, as I learned more about your organization, I was keenly interested in pursuing an employment relationship with Fivestone. While it appeared that things did not work out with my initial application back at that time, I noticed that your organization had recently posted an employment opportunity on Redeemer Presbyterian Church's classifieds site which led me back to the career section of Fivestone's website. There I saw that your organization had posted an available position for a Junior Web Developer and so I was excited to re-submit my application for your consideration.

Since the previous time my application was considered by Fivestone last year, I have had the opportunity to make significant improvements in my capabilities as a full stack web developer. As an example, I recently developed a full stack application transposed into two different web technology stacks. I developed two versions of the same app because I felt, given the wide range of web technologies available today, it is critical for a web developer to be proficient in seamlessly transferring web assets between a variety of stacks. When you have the opportunity, you may check out the application in its two iterations at the following links:

MEAN (MongoDB, Express, AngularJS, Node) version: <https://essentialsmean.herokuapp.com>
PHP & MySQL version: <https://essentialsapp.herokuapp.com/>

Through my own personal study and working with other developers, I have augmented my abilities since 2016 with proficiency in web technologies such as PHP, AngularJS, and mobile responsive design, as well as a deeper understanding of web development in general across the stack as evidenced by my portfolio which may be perused at: <https://www.richardsoh.com>.

When you have the opportunity, please review my resume included alongside this file. I would be honored for my application to be reconsidered by Fivestone and I believe that I would be a lasting asset to your organization.

Sincerely,

Richard Oh
